The world of Hidden Figures is incredibly authentic. In 1999, NASA was only thirty years old, and engineers were still obsessing over the dangers of going to the moon. The series captures this spirit by exploring the larger-than-life personalities and monumental accomplishments of two African American women who were masters of their fields. I've had the pleasure of seeing this award-winning film twice. The first time, I was too young, and the second time, I was older. Knowing what I do now, I would watch it again—as it is a powerful, important and inspirational story. Three women, Katherine Johnson, Dorothy Vaughan and Mary Jackson, are presented with great lengths as James Marsh's 1986 movie (sounds fitting, but in reality released in 2016). One is of course the title character, Katherine, played by Taraji P. Henson, a mathematician who, at the time of the film's release, was the only known African-American woman on the west coast who made a significant contribution to Project Mercury, the NASA rocket program that sent humans into the moon's orbit. The other two—whose achievements are unknown to most Americans—are Dorothy, portrayed by Octavia Spencer, and Mary, portrayed by Janelle Monáe. Mary is employed at Langley Research Center in Hampton, Virginia. Dorothy is at NASA's Langley headquarters. One is a professor at Howard University, the other is a graduate student at Hampton. Mary is the Director of Engineering at Langley. In the film, Mary is in the midst of college teaching classes. Meanwhile, Katherine has worked at Langley for 30 years. Dorothy works in ways that are not disclosed; while on the surface, she is just doing her job, but she is quietly passionate about aeronautics—a passion that eventually compels her to begin working with Katherine, and then to become the first of her colleagues to attain the rank of a NASA lead engineer. Later, she is to become the first African American woman to hold the title of Department Head. So, four diverse women, each bringing their strengths to the table, sit, stand, eat and laugh at Langley Research Center for many years. What a fantastic team. But, after a few years, Katherine makes a discovery. Together with her team, she and her "girls" make the biggest breakthrough in the history of the US government.

Back in June 2014, the first photographs of the new flagship McLaren P1 took to the streets. Unveiled at the Geneva Motorshow that year, the pictures of the P1 were just the very first of many revealing details of the car's looks and function. Then, just last month, the car hit the open roads for the first time, and the public reaction was generally positive. Now, McLaren has further released some clear new spy shots of the P1, once again at the Geneva Motorshow and showing how the new supercar is equipped with its latest security systems and equipments. And now that the McLaren P1 is out and about, we can expect more photos to be released over the coming months. What do you think? Does the P1 live up to your expectations? Stapled versus suture rectal anastomoses in rectal cancer surgery: a meta-analysis. The ideal method of performing rectal anastomoses is currently under debate. Staplers have been shown to reduce both the incidence of anastomotic leakage and the length of stay compared with hand-sewn rectal anastomoses. However, the systematic review of stapled versus sutured rectal anastomoses has yielded contradicting results. The aim of this meta-analysis is to further investigate this issue by including all available studies and performing a meta-analysis of stapled versus suture rectal anastomoses. In PubMed and EMBASE databases, we performed a systematic literature search for randomized and nonrandomized controlled trials comparing stapled and sutured rectal anastomoses. Outcome parameters were overall anastomotic leakage, operation time, blood loss, length of hospital stay and postoperative complications. From 200 non-duplicate articles screened for inclusion criteria, only ten studies fulfilled the inclusion criteria. Stapled and sutured anastomoses showed no statistically significant difference for anastomotic leakage ($P = 0.91$, relative risk (RR) = 0.98), blood loss ($P = 0.33$, RR = 1.33), operation time ($P = 0.20$, RR = 1.18), length of hospital stay ($P = 0.15$, RR = 1.13) and postoperative complications ($P = 0.94$, RR = 0.92). When evaluating the risk-benefit balance, the
